Not illustrated. 1860 Excerpt: . . . To our own nets neer bow we down, Lest on th eternal shore The angels, while our draught they own, Eeject us evermore. Sometimes a thoughtful child will come to you with some question concerning the future world, the Holy Trinity, and c. , and c. , which none can answer. If the question be asked reverently and in humility, you should try to give the little questioner her first lesson in walking by faith and not by sight; looking on patiently to that time when we shall know even as also we are known. Such children are often much beyond the rest of the class in mind, so that if the question be really difficult, and it has not excited general attention, it is perhaps better to give the answer in private; of course you will discourage anything like talk. However much your class interests you, beware of talking much of it, except occasionally to those who can and will advise and direct you; it will weary others, and may be a snare to yourself. All teachers know that theirs is a very exhausting occupation, and perhaps a little wise economy of strength might in some measure prevent the oft-told tale, that So-and-so is quite knocked up every Sunday, and must give up her class. When teaching is over, and you come home, teach yourself (and it can be done) to put the thought of the children quite aside for the moment; give...
