Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Home Letters Gertrude Cozad, on her return to Japan, writes as follows: Kobe, September 23, 1897. I think Japan has impressed me much as it would a newcomer this time. It seemed to me very miserable and cold and squalid, as I passed through the native quarter in Yokohama. There were various types of women to be seen on the streets. The well-dressed, placid, aimless, emotionless women, and among the poorer dressed women very rarely a happy face. They seemed either dull, or crushed and unhappy. That is the way the people on the street impressed me. But when I saw the girls who came down to the boat to meet Kajiro San, (A young Japanese girl who has just graduated from Mt. Holyoke, and returned to Japan with us,) either students or teachers in the girls school, all of them with bright, animated, purposeful faces, I felt the power of a Christian life, of an education, of an enlarging and widening of thought and view. The life the missionaries live here does not seem very luxurious to me; not so much so as it will after a few months, when I have been off touring awhile. I am sighing for the flesh pots of Egypt. The miserable Japanese fruit is a mockery to the name. The butter smells so I wish it might be left off the table. The milk has no more taste of milk than so much rice water. I used to feel when I told about those things in America, as if I must be stretching it, but really the half has never been told. There is everything in getting...
