Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the Department of Defense's (DOD) plans to privatize-in-place the Navy's Louisville, Kentucky, depot maintenance workload, focusing on the: (1) impact on excess depot capacity and operating costs at remaining industrial facilities; (2) cost-effectiveness of this planned privatization-in-place option; and (3) statutory requirements affecting transfers of depot maintenance workloads to the private sector. GAO found that: (1) privatization-in-place is not cost-effective given the excess capacity in the DOD depot maintenance system; (2) the Navy's privatization plan for the Louisville depot will not reduce excess capacity at the remaining depots or in the private sector and may be more costly than transferring the work to other depots; (3) DOD pays for the excess capacity whether it is in the public or private sector; (4) privatizing the facility may not comply with statutory requirements for public-private competitions, since the Navy plans to use noncompetitive procurement procedures; (5) the Navy overstated the cost of transferring the Louisville workload to other depots by at least 66 million and generally assumed that privatization would save 20 percent, which is not likely to be realized; (6) the Navy's projection is based on conditions that are not relevant for most depot maintenance workloads and does not reflect the cost of excess capacity in the public sector; (7) the Navy did not assess the risk associated with contracting the depots' core workload, since the majority of the workload is mission essential; and (8) in July 1996, the Navy awarded contracts to Hughes Missile Systems Company and United Defense Limited Partnership for work in progress, but it did not verify that the privatization plan conformed with statutory requirements for public-private competition.
